in the sense of the dictionary New Torkers ask what "words or idioms peruliar to some rural or colonial district" designate New York as a provincial settlement? True, we have the slame of the west and east sides of the Torkers ask what "words or idloms siang of the west and east such as the state of the globe and the lingo of the Chuck onnors, and even the subway twang is fing rapidly into vogue. But, again, in the language of the dictionary, are New Yorkers "opposed to metropolitan sage" when New York is the metropo-And again, "peculiar and uncultured in thought and manner." Hearken to Oscar Hammerstein, who knows people and who knows New York:

"In no sense can the expression be made to apply to New York or New Yorkers. If there ever was an intelliyent people, you find them here. New Yorkers not only grasp matters of national concern and international importance, but New York sentiment, as expressed by New Yorkers, has been known to defeat the aspirations of certain Presidents for national renown. But why take the matter seriously? I for haven't the time. The President have been misquoted. He may have meant providential instead of provincial. We would accept the former reverently."

Congressman Timothy D. Sallivan, who has met the President on friendly terms for years-as Police Commissioner, as Assemblyman, as Governor of the Empire State and as President-could not restrain his honest indignation when asked: "Is New York and are New Yorkers provincial?"

Torkers provincial?"
"Provisional?" asked the Congressman on the point of commanding Col. Mike Padden to bring the pocket dictionary. "Oh, provincial! That's a different game of cards entirely. No, no; I don't agree with Ted-President Roosevelt. But, say, he is a good fellow. He is always willing to do a favor for a fellow Many at time he has turned a political—well, many a time he has done me a good turn. He is a fairly good Democrat, is the President, and I know it. But when he calls us guys provincial, there must be some mistake about it, for he is a New Yorker himself. How could New York be a provincial village if all the people from all over the world and Washington, D. C., come here and settle down and vote? How is New York a provincial town wen we have the only Bowery on earth? How is New York a provincial back-yard when we have a Tammany Hall, thirty-five Assembly Districts, a City Hall, a Mayor and a bunch of city officials drawing fifty millions in salaries every year from the city treasury? Why, there ain't a provincial town within forty miles of New York, north, east, south or west. Those places are all full of New Yorkers, who come to New York to carn a living and get wise. This is the wisest town on earth, coming or going, and the people

OUR RECOMMENDATION FOR THIS WEEK:

A Good 6-for-a-Quarter Cigar

ENERAL BRADDOCK is the name. Most of our T customers who want a good cigar for that price swear by this one. The quality is the same year in and year out. It is very mild-burns freely and evenly-just the kind of cigar to smoke a good many of and not tire of. The tobacco used in the making is thoroughly cured and yields a pleasant, smooth smoke.
